FIRE TODAY THREATENS BUSINESS BLOCK ON FARRAGUT AVE.: DAMAGE ESTIMATED IN THOUSANDS OF DOLLARS; FOUR FIREMEN SLIGHTLY HURT; TREATED AT HOSPITAL

Flames Spread to Portions of Building Occupied by Bucks Co. Sales & Service, F. J. O'Boyle, Dominick Nocito, Lafayette Cleaners — Flames Spread Rapidly, Smoke Rolling Out — Police Govern and Detour Traffic.

Fire this morning threatened the business block on Farragut avenue, extending from Monroe street almost to Jackson street, when flames broke out in the rear of that part of the building occupied by the Bristol Bowling Alleys. The flames, originating in the rear of the second floor, in or near the women's rest room, spread through a series of air chambers in the ceiling into those portions of the same building occupied by Bucks County Sales & Service; Francis J. O'Boyle, ice cream manufacturer; Dominick Nocito, barber shop; two vacant stores, and the Lafayette Cleaners & Dyers.

The building is owned by Benjamin T. Groff. His son, William Groff, operates the Bucks County Sales & Service, or Ford agency, and his son-in-law, Francis J. O'Boyle, operates the Bristol Bowling Alleys and also the ice cream plant.

It was impossible to get an accurate estimate of the loss this morning, due to the condition of the building. It is believed that it will total several thousands of dollars.

There were ten bowling alleys, two of which were just about completed and ready to be put into play. Workmen had just arrived to complete these.

Four firemen were given hospital treatment. Second Assistant Chief, Livingston Joyce, was treated for a laceration of the scalp; and First Assistant Chief, Joseph Buck, was overcome by smoke; Ladderman Charles Goslin ran a nail into his foot and William Dougherty sustained a sprained knee. All were taken to the Wagner hospital. After receiving treatment they were discharged.

Mr. Groff, owner of the building, said that he believed that he had ample insurance to cover the loss to the building. As to the amount of insurance on the contents, he was in doubt.

The flames made very rapid headway, spreading through the air chambers in the ceiling and breaking out at various points. Dense clouds of smoke rolled from the structure which was built here during World War I by the Emergency Fleet Corporation. The building was frame, with stucco exterior, and abuts the garage of Damon Johnson, a brick fire wall separating the two. Adjoining the Johnson garage is the building of Edward T. Finegan, occupied by the Acme Market. The flames did not reach the Johnson garage or the Acme Market. In fact the flames did not reach the first floor of the structure in which they originated, the damage to this portion of the building being due to water. Except for the gutting of one room on the second floor most of the actual fire was confined to the air chamber above the second floor. The roof rafters were badly burned and the tempo board ceiling and side-walls scorched.

When the firemen arrived Chief Hagerman realized that the blaze had a good start and that it was in a building where it would quickly spread. He ordered all apparatus into service, and the nearby streets were a network of hose lines. Great quantities of water were pumped into the blazing structure to quickly check the spread of the flames. Five thousand feet of hose was put into service.

Jury Is Out 2½ Hours; Verdict Against John H. Wichser, Given At 5 P. M.

ASK FOR NEW TRIAL Case Involves Injuries Sustained By Earll Over 2 Years Ago

DOYLESTOWN, Oct. 21 — A verdict of $18,101 was given in the Bucks County courts here early last evening in favor of Percy D. Earll, Bristol, who had sought $50,000 damages in a case in which Councilman John C. Wichser, Bristol, was the defendant.

The verdict is the largest given in the local courts in many years.

The jury remained out approximately 2½ hours, deliberating on the case.

Testimony was heard at the latter end of the week, and yesterday morning, when the case re-opened, attorneys for the plaintiff and defendant made their speeches to the jury. John Leslie Kilcayne made the speech for Wichser, and Webster S. Achey for Earll.

Judge Calvin S. Boyer then charged the jury early in the afternoon.

The attorneys for the defendant, Wichser, immediately filed a motion for a new trial, indicating that the case may be carried to a higher court if necessary.

It was not brought out officially during the trial, but information given in the court-room was to the effect that Wichser's accident insurance policy has a limit of $5,000.

MAKE IT WORK

Democracy, which finds expression in our two-party system, has been in effect here in Bristol a long, long time. The Borough was incorporated on November 14, 1720.

More than half a century before there was any Congress of the United States of America, there was a Borough Council of Bristol. America was not a nation in those days. The city of Washington, D. C., existed only as some trees and fields on the bank of the Potomac River. The country hardly had begun to grow up.

But here on the bank of the Delaware River, men were electing a Burgess and a Council to conduct the affairs of their Borough. The two-party system of government was working.

How did it work in those days? The only way a free government ever has worked or ever will operate successfully: the citizens of the community at regular intervals elected the best men they could find for the Borough offices. The officers so chosen performed their duties to the best of their abilities. At the next election the same procedure was set in motion.

It wasn't complicated. A constitutional government is fundamentally a simple system, which is one reason why it is the best form of government ever devised. Its demands on the individual are few, but important. It asks him to obey the laws, to pay his taxes, and to vote at each election for the candidates he believes best qualified for office.

Now, more than two hundred years later, the same system still prevails in the same Borough of Bristol. In 1941, just as in 1720, each citizen has the chance to cast his ballot for those he believes can and will do the job.

The job here is to manage the affairs of the Borough of Bristol to the best advantage of all the citizens. The best men for the job are those who have demonstrated their worth and their ability to perform the duties.

If each citizen votes for those men, then our system of government is working, and always will be.

HALLOWE'EN PARADE TO BE A HUGE ONE

Plans Are Almost Completed For Big Demonstration To Be Held October 30th

MANY HAVE ENTERED

Just nine more days before Bristol's mammoth Halloween parade and celebration! And according to reports presented last evening before the Lower Bucks County Halloween Association committee meeting at the Legion Home, Radcliffe street, the parade promises to be the biggest and best ever staged in this area.

Plans were just about completed for the parade last night. Indications point to large entries in each of the six divisions. Two silver loving cups and $355 in cash prizes will be awarded winners in the various divisions on the night of the parade, Thursday, October 30th. Many local organizations which have not participated in past years plan to have groups or floats, or both, in line this year. Twelve separate groups from Bristol high school will take part. And the new bicycle division promises to develop into a parade all by itself.

Citizens of the Borough have contributed very generously this year towards defraying the expenses of the affair. Reports last evening showed that collections have just about been Continued On Page Four

'Twas A Sad Case

(By "The Stroller") There were some humorous, and possibly some sad, situations that developed on Sunday evening during the "illuminated black-out" of Bristol borough.

I wasn't certain if I should laugh or not, but I did tinkle my "funny-one" when I heard of the man who was hurrying home with a quantity of ice cream for the enjoyment of his family, and found himself sitting for 15 minutes on one of our main thoroughfares.

Had I known he was in such a "fix" I would have grabbed a spoon and helped to solve the dilemma.

DEFENDANT FAVORED IN AN ACCIDENT CASE

Jury Returns Verdict Against John Schulberger, Jr., of Nockamixon Twp.

SOME OTHER CASES

DOYLESTOWN, Oct. 21 — Deliberating about 15 minutes, a jury in Civil and Equity Court, here, at the end of the week, returned a verdict in favor of the defendant, Clarence B. Wolfinger, 27, Harrow farm hand, and against John Schulberger, Jr., 41, Ridge Road, Nockamixon township, who was suing for $10,000 damages following a head-on two-car collision on the Durham Road, July 22, 1940.

President Judge Hiram H. Keller presided at the trial which was unique in two respects. Frank Fleck, 24, of Bucksville, who was named as an added defendant, was dropped during the trial because of a supreme court ruling.

President Judge Keller ruled that, since the added defendant, Fleck, had never had a statement of claim filed against him by the plaintiff he could be dropped from the record, which was done.

The plaintiff, Schulberger, a Bethlehem steel worker, who was riding in a car driven by Fleck on the road between Burdenville and the Harrow Continued On Page Four

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT (Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

Gloom Purveyors

Washington, Oct. 18. WITH the great Russian tragedy there has developed here, and elsewhere, another wave of extremely pessimistic feeling about the outcome of the war comparable to that which infected both the War and State Departments, to say nothing of various political circles, when, right after the fall of France in June, 1940, it was difficult to find any of our military or diplomatic authorities who thought England could hold out for more than a month or two.

THEY were very badly mistaken then, and they made the same kind of mistake last June, when, following the Nazi attack on Russia, the

Moscow's Defenses Take Terrific Pounding

Berlin, Oct. 21 — Moscow's semi-circular frontal defenses took a terrific pounding from German artillery batteries and dive bombers today as Nazi legions pressed their huge assault on the Soviet city.

Meanwhile the German command announced capture of the city of Stalino, a strategic industrial center in the rich Donetz Basin, where German forces are driving an offensive against Rostov, gateway to the oil producing Caucasus.

In Berlin, German authorities said the fourth month of the Russian campaign was nearing its end with the German legions marching into the Donetz Basin and "driving the Stalin regime into the shadow of the Ural Mountains."

According to reports from the front, Moscow has not only become the target of German bombs and shells, but the Red capital will be "blown sky high by Soviet dynamite when it is no longer tenable."

According to German reports, dynamite charges already have been placed in Moscow's principal buildings, ready to be set off when the signal is given in accordance with the Russian scorched earth program.

Persistent reports in Berlin claim that Premier Josef Stalin already has left Moscow aboard an armored train and that the city of Perm, otherwise known as Molotov City, west of the Urals has been chosen as the seat for the Soviet Supreme Council.

Reports in London, however, said Stalin was cruising up and down the Moscow defense front in an armored train, supervising Red army resistance to the Germans.

FIND WOMAN'S BODY IN DELAWARE RIVER NEAR DORRANCE ST.

Body Is Identified As Mrs. Glenn West, 347 Taft Street, Bristol

WAS REPORTED MISSING

Mrs. West Left Her Home At Six o'Clock Last Evening To Water the Dog

The body of Mrs. Glenn West, 347 Taft street, was found in the Delaware River, just below Dorrance street, this morning, by Martin Bosley, colored. Bosley saw the body floating in the water and procuring a piece of wire waded out into the stream and fastening the wire to the woman's clothing, pulled it into shore.

Deputy coroner, Dr. Charles F. Samsel, was called, and also the Bristol police, Chief Jones and Dr. Samsel went to the scene and had the body removed to the morgue of Robert C. Ruehl.

Mrs. West was fully clothed, even to a sweater. She had not been in the best of health recently, and was reported to the police at one o'clock this morning, as being missing.

Mrs. West, the former Bella S. Goslin, had left her home last evening at about six o'clock, telling her husband she would take water to the dog in the yard. When she did not return to the house after a length of time, her children and husband became alarmed. Mr. West immediately started a search, knowing his wife had been despondent for some time. No trace of her could be secured, and after several hours he reported the plight to the police. Mr. West and officers continuing the search throughout the night.

No Trace Found of Body Of Drowned Yardley Lad

YARDLEY, Oct. 21 — No trace has been found of the body of Hyla Rae Smith, 23-year-old Seascout of Yardley, who met death by drowning in the Delaware River at Florence Heights, Sunday.

Firemen of Burlington and Florence, N. J., have been searching with a flotilla of boats for the past two days, in an effort to recover the body.

It is believed that Smith, who was subject to dizzy spells, fell into the water. He and William May, 17, and George Hoffman, 18, were enroute home from a week-end trip to Wilmington, Del., when the tragedy occurred.

After searching the water, May and Hoffman notified police at Florence. The young man is the son of Charles Smith of Geneva, N. Y. Two sisters and two brothers also survive.

CO-ORDINATION NEEDED

War relief activities in this country in behalf of the belligerent nations should be co-ordinated through a central advisory board to prevent existing duplication and waste, according to an interim report by a special committee appointed by President Roosevelt.

The committee, consisting of Joseph E. Davies, chairman; Charles P. Taft and Dr. Frederick P. Keppel, recommends that licenses of such agencies now registered with the Department of State be revoked at some given date and new licenses granted "only when it appears to be in the public interest, and upon submission of satisfactory proof by the applicants that they are in a position to carry out their proposed relief activities efficiently and economically, and without duplication of work being done by other agencies, such as the Red Cross."

Perhaps the strongest argument in favor of the committee's recommendation can be found in statistics accompanying it. About 700 foreign relief agencies, with many thousands of branches and associated local groups, have been set up in this country since September, 1939. In two years about $90,000,000 has been contributed to war relief work through these agencies. Fewer than fifty of the 700 agencies account for ninety per cent of the total raised, and three of the seventy British agencies for one-third of this total.

Among the 331 agencies which have reported to the State Department, the average for administrative and other expenses is about ten per cent. Costs range from three to twenty-five per cent—and in the case of some non-belligerent countries as high as thirty per cent. The larger, permanent organizations have much lower costs than the smaller and hastily organized "emergency" groups.

Administrative cost, of course, is not the only bad feature of such a multiplicity of war relief agencies. Necessarily there is duplication of effort along many lines. According to the committee, about one-half of the existing organizations enquired through the Red Cross, about the relaxation of their program to relief work already under way. The other half went ahead without obtaining this information.

It seems plain that the interests of the public, of the relief organizations and of the war sufferers whom they are trying to help would be served by intelligent integration and co-ordination of relief activity.

SENATE STENOGRAPHER by MAXWELL THAYER

CHAPTER TWENTY-THREE

She put out her hand and Joe took it. "Come in! Come in!" she cried merrily. He came in—right into her arms. He kissed her softly, tenderly, and then whispered in her ear: "Darling, I've been so lonesome, so worried . . . Let's don't ever quarrel again."

"No, Joe," she whispered back, "never again, never!"

For a long time they stood in a close embrace. Then they sat on the sofa, their awareness of each other filling the room with an electric thrill.

"What have you been doing with yourself?" she asked.

"Worrying about you, mostly," he replied.

"Why worry about me?" she asked. "I can take care of myself."

But, under her breath, she added "I hope."

"Oh, I just worried about you because—well, because."

Gale would have pressed her questioning farther, but she was afraid he might tell her something she had no right to know, something that Colburn might want to know, too, and she did not want to hear it. This was her evening and it wasn't going to be spoiled if she could help it.

"Already," she said, getting up, "Where we going?"

As Joe helped her on with her coat he said softly, "Wherever you say, sweetheart."

A flame shot through her.

As they were going down the stairs to the street, she squeezed his arm. "Tonight," she said, "let's not talk about anything but just us. Let's just have fun and forget that you're the governor's secretary and that I work for Senator Murray."

"Suits me," he said. As he helped her into the car, he said: "Whither away my pretty maid?"

To which she replied: "Wherever my lord wills," and bowed her head in mock subservience.

"We'll head in the general direction of Dovani's Farms, if chicken will fit the bill," Joe said. "I feel like chicken. And if you're not hungry, we'll stop along the way. There's something I want to see." He turned to look at her. "Do you like dogs?"

"Uhuh, and cats and raccoons, and chipmunks, and rabbits and chickens."

"Well," he explained, "dogs are my favorites. There's a kennel out here that has jackshaws. I've been on the verge of buying one several times."

"They're cute. Let's stop."

An aged man came down the kennel steps to greet them.

"We'd like to see a puppy," Nash said.

"You want to buy or you just want to look?" He was annoyed by people who came at night when his dogs were asleep; they always howled when disturbed.

"We want to look and if we see something we like, we'll buy."

"This way," he said, and walked off in the darkness toward some buildings.

"Quiet! Quiet!" the kennel man yelled, adding to the dogs' clamor.

Inside, Gale saw puppies of all sizes. One little black fellow stood on his hind legs to nuzzle her hand.

Nash stooped and scratched it behind the ears.

"How much is this one?" Nash asked.

other in their hurry to reach the door and be petted.

"Oh, look!" Gale said. "Gosh, but they're cute! I'd like to take them all."

The owner immediately took her at her word. "Take 'em all ay! I'll make you a good price, two hundred bucks."

In the end they bought the little black fellow and Joe left it in the kennel for future delivery.

When they were back in the car, Nash stepped on the gas and the big car leaped ahead. Within a few minutes they pulled up at "Dovani's Farms."

Inside there was a good sized dance floor with booths in a semi-circle around it. A big fireplace in which there were blazing logs gave it a homey look.

They ordered fried chicken and danced to the music of a coin phonograph until their meal was placed on the table.

"Darling," Joe said, "it's been so much fun tonight." He patted her hand. "What'll we call the new pup?"

"We might call her Antoinette, the little flirt," Gale suggested.

"Marie—" Joe began and then a quick glance from Gale stopped him. "No, I don't think that's a very good name at that."

Joe leaned over and took her hand. She looked into his eyes and waited.

"Sweetheart, I don't want to do what you asked me not to do and this of all evenings I don't want to upset you . . . you are so lovely, so darn desirable . . . but you're heading for trouble if you stay on the job you have. You're liable to be summoned by the grand jury."

"Why?" she choked it out.

"Murray's bill is being watched. You know there's something wrong with it, don't you? What's Colburn's interest in it?"

Gale wanted to cry. She arose, wearily. "Would you take me home, please?" She went toward the door and there was nothing Nash could do but follow her.

Her jangling telephone awakened her abruptly.

"Shall I come over and get my dollar?" Colburn asked without any preliminaries.

"Yeah, you win your dollar, but I'll bring it to you."

"No, I'm coming over." And Colburn hung up.

Gale stamped her foot, jiggled her telephone and then gave up. Never had she known any one person who could make her so angry. She ought to break him of the habit and refuse to answer the bell.

Gale had the coffee pot on before Colburn arrived. He had doughnuts in a big bag when he came in. "I spent your dollar for doughnuts," he said.

Gale's hands went to her hips. "I don't mind you bringing doughnuts, I don't mind paying you the dollar, but I'm darned if I like the way you call a person up and say you're coming out and then hang up without giving one a chance to say anything."

Surprise showed on his face. "By golly, I'm sorry!" he said. "I never thought of it."

"Where?"

"Anywhere, just to get away where I could think . . . but it would mean leaving Joe without an explanation and I couldn't do that."

"What could you do with a mar like that?" Gale asked herself. She gave up.

"Sit down," she said, mimicking his commanding voice.

He sat, like Gale and others had done when he barked out his commands, and held the big bag of doughnuts in his lap. She took them from him.

When the doughnuts were hot, she put them on the table with the coffee and called Colburn.

"Sit down," she said, and he sat. She put an apron around his neck for a napkin and he did not object. And they dunked together. Gale felt kindly toward the big man.

When they returned to the living room, Gale fished a dollar out of her purse and handed it to Colburn.

"Thanks," he said, taking it and thrusting it into his vest pocket. "Now tell me about it."

Gale was silent for several minutes, smoking and thinking.

"I'm going to take my hair down," she began, "and while I'm going to tell you what you want to know, I'm going to tell you also what you may not want to know or care about."

"Shoot the works, kid, I'm all ears," he replied.

"To make it brief, Joe warned me that the Murray bill was being watched, that there might be a grand jury investigation, that I might be called, and asked me what your interest in it was? He asked me to quit my job."

"And what did you say?"

"I said nothing," Gale said. "I merely asked him to take me home and he didn't press the subject farther."

"That was sensible."

"Wonder," replied Gale, "I wonder if it was. You see, I could have denied."

"But protests aren't as convincing as silence," Colburn said. "You'd have been on the defensive. This way, you have him on the defensive. I'll bet you, he's kicking himself right now."

"Perhaps. But, so am I." Gale looked straight at Colburn, her eyes never wavering. "You see, I happen to love Joe Nash."

"Yeah, I know—"

She ignored his remark and went on. "I love him and yet I seem to do everything to drive him away from me. I know you think that love is for children, that money is more important than anything else in the world. Well, I've got money, but it isn't as important to me as Joe Nash."

He ignored her reference to having money. "What do you intend to do about it?"

"I don't know. You can be sure of one thing, I'll never talk and while I may quit my job and sever all connections with you and your people, I won't go to work in the governor's office. I wish I knew what to do."

"Why not wait and let events take care of themselves?"

"That's the easy way, of course, and a way that indecision may make necessary," she said. "I'd thought of going away."

"Where?"

"Anywhere, just to get away where I could think . . . but it would mean leaving Joe without an explanation and I couldn't do that."

Bristol Had Two Fatal Accidents During '40

safety contest in the State of Pennsylvania.

According to Harry D. Immel, director of the Bureau of Inspection, the safest community of more than 10,000 population in the state last year, was the borough of Mount Carmel, in Northumberland county. This town of 17,753 population in the center of the hard coal region, with coal mining its chief industry, recorded only one fatal accident in 1940. This accident occurred in a home. The status is determined on a basis of number of accidents per 1000 population.

Bristol's average of fatal accidents per 1000 population is listed at 1682.

In the summary of fatal accidents charged to counties in the state during the last year it is shown that Bucks County had 17. One was an industrial accident; one home; 11, traffic; and four, general. This shows an average of 1579, the population of the county being 107,658.

"This is the first time any effort has ever been made to ascertain the relative positions of Pennsylvania communities with respect to safety," states Mr. Immel. "The undertaking was launched last December at a state-wide Industrial Safety Engineering Conference held in Harrisburg under the auspices of the Bureau of Inspection of the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry and community safety councils. At that conference, Dana Jones, secretary of the Erie Manufacturers' Association, proposed a contest of this sort as a means of stimulating interest in community safety. Mr. Jones was appointed chairman of a committee to conduct the contest and the Bureau of Inspection undertook to assemble the data."

"It was early determined that only statistics could be considered and that these should be listed in four broad groupings under the headings of industry, home, traffic and general. Even in this simplified form, it was found almost impossible to assemble the necessary statistics."

"If the contest should do more, it is its exposure of the woeful lack of statistical information on community accidents will alone justify it. Although industry has long recognized still largely heedless of this problem. From the standpoint of industry, the contest is of great importance because inevitably many of the victims of accidents which occur outside of industrial establishments are industrial workers. The loss of their services to industry is particularly serious at this time. To labor, the tragic significance of these accidents off the job is that the benefits of Workmen's Compensation Insurance are not applicable to cushion the shock.

"One of the most striking revelations in this report is the extent of accidents in the home. In Pennsylvania as a whole in 1940, there were 5,196 accident fatalities. Traffic accidents lead with 2,167 fatalities, but the home is second with 1,285. Industry demonstrated the success of its control efforts with a registry of only 900 fatalities in this leading industrial Commonwealth. Victims of hazardous coal mining are included. Fatalities classified as general numbered 844 . . .

"Among the counties taken as a whole, Bedford ranked safest with one industrial accident and one in traffic. In second place was Bucks County with seventeen fatalities and in third place Huntingdon County with seven. Here again, of course, rating in the contest was determined by populations."

"Old American Homes" Visited in Yardley

YARDLEY, Oct. 21.—The Yardley Civic Club observed its October social meeting on Thursday in the form of a visit to "Old American Homes." The tour was arranged by Mrs. Robert C. Belleville, 3rd, and included visitations to "Lakeside" the home of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Cadwallader, where a flag with 32 stars on a field of blue welcomed the guests. This flag was made at the time there were 32 states in the union, and is in perfect condition. It was flown in the breeze over the homestead that has housed seven generations of Cadwalladers. Mr. Cadwallader welcomed everyone in the dining room, giving a brief history of the house, and the changes made through the years, and exhibited a deed from William Penn to the original owner of the home in the 17th century.

Mrs. Durell L. Noyes, who six months ago completed the renovation of an old house, welcomed guests to her home. Mrs. Robert DeVeech, who are also newcomers to the community, delightfully displayed their home "Tobola" with their wonderful collection of antique dishes, furniture, etc., blended with modern ideas for the making of a home.

Mrs. Mary Yardley was hostess to the group at an "Early American tea," served before a mammoth fireplace by candlelight, with Mrs. Alfred A. Danuser and Mrs. A. J. Cadwallader pouring. Assisting Mrs. Yardley were Mrs. Robert C. Belleville, 3rd, Mrs. Virgil Kauffman, Mrs. William T. Woodhouse, Miss Helen W. Leedom.

GRAND THEATRE

A crime drama with new twists and a fresh treatment is Warner Bros. "Highway West," starring Brenda Marshall and Arthur Kennedy, which opens at the Grand Theatre today.

The fast-paced film's stars are comparatively newcomers to Hollywood. Both Kennedy and Miss Marshall are from Broadway, and have had remarkable success in their recent work in films. And heading the important supporting cast are lovely Olympe Bradna, William Lundigan and Slim Summerville.

Miss Marshall's role is that of a young bride who is shocked to discover that her husband, played by Kennedy, is a bank robber. He is apprehended while doing a big job and sent to the penitentiary. Brenda, not letting anyone know of her marriage, opens an auto court with her young sister, played by Olympe Bradna. William Lundigan falls in love with Brenda and all is cheerful until Kennedy appears, having broken out of jail.

BRISTOL THEATRE

Dorothy Lamour is an expert on islands. As a cinematic castaway, Dotty has been tossed upon bits of land surrounded by water and inhabited only by apes, elephants, tigers, and now and then, by Jon Hall, Lynne Overman, Ray Milland or Robert Preston.

Famous quotes of the week were many. Woody Wetherhold, Bensalem's new mentor, said before game time Saturday, "I'll start my whole second team. At least they can't do any worse than lose."

Smiling a bit more freely after that atrocious first half, Bristol's Clarence Bartholomew retorted, "You know, it's funny what psychological edge can do. They were sluggish during the first half possibly because the Deaf School players couldn't talk back to them or arouse their spirits."

And perhaps the most newsworthy item of them all came from Morrisville High School's efficient Faculty Manager of Athletics, Isaac A. Scott. Better known as just plain "Ike" to his cohorts, he broke the story on a new era for local "biggies." "I would like to take this opportunity of announcing the formation of a new football conference composed of the following schools," chirped Scott. The members were Bristol, Morrisville, Conshohocken and Bridgeport.

All such talk had a significant ring. Bensalem's varsity sat motionless whilst the invading Boothwyn eleven ran for a touchdown against the seconds. Once in the game, they began to move offensively for the first time this season.

The Owls have been the talk of the circuit. Bensalem undoubtedly has the biggest squad in the district, but is now headed for a dethroning act in the "Little Four" Conference. Newtown personally saw to this. And the reason is not traceable to new coach Wetherhold's inability. Bensalem positively will not block.

Mossbrook, Ashton, Eldys and Carter are all potentially fine backs. But behind poor interference they're just another guy named "Joe" carrying a ball. Naturally the backs get peeved, berate the line and general discord is the result. Thus follows a dismal season. Now, before it is too late, the Owls could regain their foothold, work together as a unit and try to overcome their slight deficiency. They've got everything in their make-up to play excellent ball except the mental outlook. This is more the 50 per cent of the ball game, as most leading coaches readily admit.

Only the very few scattering of spectators who watched the Bristol-P. S. D. scrap in the drizzle at Germantown avenue can appreciate the second half surge of Bristol. Fans rubbed their eyes during the first two sessions. The Cardinals were slightly "awful."

No greater or more striking example of attitude was ever drawn by an artist or written by a literary genius. The Bunnies were so lackadaisical that you wouldn't have recognized them as the same team that defeated Langhorne and Bensalem rather handily.

As the game progressed, it appeared that this was the showdown. It was apparent during the first half that both Bristol and Bensalem must have been of an extremely low calibre. Up against better class opposition, the Bunnies were folding fast and furious. But the halftime intermission must have given Bartholomew time to whip his boys into proper mettle. As they took the kick-off to midfield, Bristol went into a huddle. They broke out with a whoop that nearly frightened the Mutes. It was so ear splitting. Throughout the remainder of the contest they chattered, fought and drove their way to a marvelous showing.

Bristol proved in that ball game that they can play fine football. Both Conshohocken and Bridgeport are suffering a lukewarm year this fall. So Bristol has but two games of a stiff nature. Burlington and Morrisville will give them trouble. From this Saturday on, Bristol faces its season.

Morrisville was terrific Friday evening under the lights in rocking Bridgeport by a 25 to 0 tally. In fact, the Bulldogs aptly showed enough to be rated the outstanding team of the section. Figuring the unit in all-round strength, it shades Bristol by a slight margin.

No Morrisville eleven ever presented a more diversified attack. The Dogs have one of the best co-ordinated backfields in their long history. There are no Yeager's available to glitter across the horizon in a spectacular manner, but there are four very smooth working boys performing their chores neatly behind a fairly tight forward wall. Wallace is the hot man on the offense. He is perhaps classified as the star of the pack. McAllister is a good line basher, but is noted for a great backing up on the defense. Hutchinson and Wilcox fit in well running and throwing.

The rest of the week-end preview is form stuff. Langhorne was just about flogged by Pemberton in the last period, when Knox's pass was intercepted. The 40 yard line and converted into a 50 yard line. Those things will happen.

Nothing is more enthusiastically received by the home side than a completed pass. On the other hand, nothing is more sorrowful than an interception. Newtown went out of its class in succumbing to Newark, Delaware, by a 25 to 6 count. Even at that the Indians excellent back, Clarence Pidcock, played noticeably well.

LACK OF BACKFIELD PLAYERS A HANDICAP

Lack of backfield material is handicapping the St. Ann's A. A. independent gridders. The club has lost two games and won one and will hold an important practice session tonight.

The Purple and Gold line is a solid stone wall as all opposing clubs will state. But with a weak backfield, the Saints are at a standstill. Last week against the Palmyra team, St. Ann's had but two of their regular backs present.

The Palmyra story may have been a different one for 57 minutes of the game the St. Ann's forward wall held the opposition and kept them from getting into a scoring position.

But the backs failed to stop a Palmyra forward pass attack and the result was a defeat for the Purple and Gold.

"Jimmy" Doherty's Fallsington team, with four straight victories to its credit, will also practice tonight in preparation for their forthcoming game with the Trenton Eagles.

which followed an Elks' picnic near Bristol on September 17, 1939.

The plaintiff contended that the defendant drove his truck into Bristol at a high rate of speed. On the Forge Bridge which spans the canal at Bristol, it was claimed that the truck struck a man-hole, 30 feet from the crest of the bridge, jolting Earll, who was seated on the tail-board of the truck, to the ground. Earll, it was claimed, suffered permanent injuries when his head struck the highway. Earll lives at 190 Fillmore street, and Wicher at 309 Dorrance street.

In addition to Kilcoyne, Wicher was represented by Howard I. James and John P. Betz, Bristol attorneys. Many witnesses were heard throughout the trial. Earll and Wicher had served as co-chairmen at the picnic conducted by Bristol Lodge of Elks. The two had remained after most of the other picnickers and cleared up the picnic grounds. It was stated that Wicher offered to provide transportation to Bristol for Earll and two others. Earll jumping into the rear of the truck, while the other two sat in front.

Defendant Favored In An Accident Case

and was injured when their car collided head-on with a car driven by the defendant, Clarence B. Wolfinger, almost had his case dismissed.

It seems that while the plaintiff was a patient in the Quakertown Community Hospital he was interviewed by an insurance company representative who managed to procure his signature to a statement which was in reality a recital of details of the accident.

When the plaintiff, who suffered a broken arm and other injuries in the accident and was unconscious about four or five days, denied that the signature on the confession was his or that the one on the original statement of claim was his, counsel for the defendant made a motion to have the case withdrawn and the defendant dismissed since the damage claim was not his.

President Judge Keller asked the plaintiff to examine closely and see whether the signature on the statement made in the hospital and the one on the statement of claim were identical and his. Finally, the plaintiff said they were the same and in his own handwriting.

Dr. Ralph C. Worrell, Springtown, testified that the plaintiff suffered a broken arm and a concussion on July 22, 1940, and didn't return to work until September 16, 1940.

The defendant, Clarence B. Wolfinger, 27, Harrow, a farm hand, who was driving his car north on the Durham Road between Bursonville and the Harrow, said he saw the plaintiff's car about 40 feet away and that it kept on coming closer and closer toward him on his side of the road. "My car was in the ditch on the right hand side of the road when you crashed head-on," said the defendant who explained he was unconscious in the Quakertown Community Hospital for three days following the accident. His car was practically demolished.

Frank J. Nease, Bursonville, who lived nearby the scene of the crash, said the four men—two in each car—were all unconscious after the crash. "Fleck told me he must have fallen asleep," testified Nease.

Frank Fleck, 24, Backsville, Bethlehem steel worker who was driving the car in which the plaintiff was riding home from work with him, denied that he fell asleep or ever told anyone that Schulberger was asleep at the time of the accident.

Climaxing a three-day trial, a jury, which deliberated almost an hour, on Friday returned a verdict before President Judge Keller, amounting to $735.07, in favor of Edward Zeutzius, trading as Edward's Turkey Farm, Mount Bethel, against William S. Savage, Doylestown.

When the jury returned a verdict, involving a claim of $682.20, without computing the interest from July 1, 1940, President Judge Keller demanded they return and figure out the interest.

Returning in a few minutes the jury reported interest amounting to $52.87 which they added to the sum of $682.20, making a total verdict of $735.07.

The trial was the result of some transactions involving contracting for 20,000 turkey eggs.
